SIUC student drowns

Four friends struggle to deal with sudden loss after Cedar Lake accident

DAVID OSBORNE AND RYAN THROST
DAILY EGYPTIAN

A spur-of-the-moment trip to Cedar Lake ended in tragedy for an SIUC senior Sunday as he drowned 20 feet from the shore in front of three disbelieving friends.

Gregory Parks Jr., a senior in cinema and photography from Chicago, drowned at 4:42 p.m. Sunday while swimming with friends Greg McGee, Jeff Perko and Nate Harp in the Cove Hollow area of Cedar Lake. Parks and McGee were trying to swim across the cove when something went wrong. Parks went under and did not surface. Perko, an undecided sophomore from Springfield, and Harp, a sophomore in electrical engineering from Carlinville, had already crossed the cove, and started back across.

Perko ran to a nearby residence to summon help while Harp and McGee dove repeatedly for an hour trying to locate Parks. Parks was finally located and recovered by a dive team and taken to St. Joseph Memorial Hospital in Murphysboro where he was pronounced dead.

Police are calling the incident an accidental drowning, pending the outcome of an autopsy.

McGee, a junior in photography from Chicago, said Parks was lagging behind, but didn't seem to be struggling. Parks rolled over on his back to do a backstroke, then gasped. McGee said Parks did not look like he was drowning at the time, then he just started to go under.

"He was a survivor; he survived the inner city — gangs and murders — it doesn't seem right that water would kill him," McGee said. McGee attended Chicago

Vocational High School with Parks. The two of them came down to Carbondale to check out SIUC and Parks' response was nearly immediate.

"He was the first one to say, 'Yeah, I love this school,'" McGee said.

McGee sat with Jazmin Jones on the couch a mere 24 hours after the accident, a picture album was open on her lap. Memories of Parks were captured in the plethora of pictures of Parks, McGee and Jones. Jones, a junior in art education from Chicago, also attended high school with Parks and McGee. Many of the pictures show Parks in martial art poses, one of his many passions.

Matt Leggans, a junior in university studies from Carbondale, was Parks' martial art instructor. When Parks missed the 6 p.m. class Sunday, Leggans knew something was wrong. Parks never missed class, often helping to set up equipment for demonstrations.

"He was one of those few good people in the world, people you hate to see go," Leggans said.

Leggans said Parks always had a smile on his face. That is how Robert Cannon, a senior in cinema from Knoxville, Tenn., remembers Parks. Cannon, who had classes with Parks since their freshman year, said they had become friends because of a shared interest in the cinema, especially martial arts movies.

"I never saw him when he didn't smile," Cannon said. Cannon said Parks was the kind of guy who always encouraged others.

Race for 115th District State Representative

JESSE DRURY — DAILY EGYPTIAN

Robert Koehn, Democratic challenger in the 115th district state representative race, talks politics with Keith Krans, from Carbondale, at Denny's. Koehn visits a coffee shop every morning before work to promote his campaign.

Democratic challenger Robert Koehn:

Farmer, father, campaigner, Educator

Editor's note: This is the second installment in a two-part series looking at the two men who seek the state representative seat for the 115th district.

ALEXA AGUILAR
DAILY EGYPTIAN

The early light of dawn hasn't yet appeared when Robert Koehn starts campaigning.

The street lights are still on at 6 a.m. as Koehn makes his rounds at coffee shops in the 115th district. From the Denny's in Carbondale to little diners in the small townships, he eagerly meets and greets as many people as possible before going to his day job as superintendent of DeSoto Grade School.

Koehn is using every minute of spare time he has in his attempt to beat incumbent Mike Bost for the state representative seat. And if making the coffee shop rounds before dawn is what it takes, that's what Koehn will do.

Hard work and determination are not unfamiliar to Koehn. He has utilized those qualities his whole life in order to be who he is today.

Koehn comes from what he admits were "meager beginnings" on a family farm in rural Ava-Campbell Hill. He worked hard on the farm — so hard, that his mother said he didn't have time to get a summer job in high school.

As busy as he was playing baseball for the American Legion, basketball for Gorham High School, and working on the family farm, Koehn never missed a day of high school.

"How many kids do that?" asked Koehn's mother, Pat, adding that just last week, her son came in to help them with the hay. "We are so proud of our boy."

Pat Bramlet, a family and consumer science teacher at Trico High School, remembered teaching Koehn and his friends how to bake cakes in her home economics class at Gorham High, after she and the agriculture teacher decided to switch classes. The boys took home economics and the girls took agriculture.

Bramlet said the boys were very competitive, and that it was funny to see them struggle to make the best cake.

"We had such a good time at that little school," Bramlet said. "Robert is a farm boy with a solid set of values."

It was during those busy days as a boy on the farm that Koehn became interested in politics. His mother was a precinct committeewoman, and she remembers how much Koehn and his older brother admired the local sheriff.

But it was watching the party conventions of the Kennedy and Nixon election in 1960 that hooked Koehn. He said his parents, tired from a long day's farming, thought he was crazy staying up until 3 a.m. to watch the speeches.

After high school and a year at MacMurray College, Koehn attended SIUC. Lori James-Gross, assistant principal at Murphysboro High School, remembers Koehn as a conscientious student, one who was always easy to work with.

Koehn learned in college how important government programs can be, an idea that has carried over into his political philosophy as a Democrat. When asked by the College

Faculty position numbers: a national issue

The SIUC Faculty Association is not alone in wanting to maintain numbers

ANNE MARIE TAVELLA
DAILY EGYPTIAN

The concern of maintaining a core of tenure and tenure-track faculty lines is not an issue unique to SIUC.

On Sept. 5, more than 650 professors at Eastern Michigan University went on strike because of the expanding role of part-time and full-time lecturers at the university.

This year, the Association of Pennsylvania State College and University Faculties ratified a three-year contract, which breaks new ground. The contract states that full-time, non tenure-track faculty who teach for more than five consecutive years may be automatically eligible for a tenure-track position.

Although the issue has recently received national attention, it is not a new concern in education communities.

Several years ago the American Association of University Professors approved a policy that urged professors to obtain a guarantee that when they retire their positions are filled by tenure-track professors. The policy also encouraged professors to keep track of the number of tenure and tenure-track professors at their universities.

On Monday, the first mediation session began between the administration and the Faculty Association at SIUC. One of the major issues being negotiated is the amount of faculty positions. The number of tenure and tenure-track positions given for October was 690. Three years ago the number of tenure and tenure-track positions was 735.

The Eastern Michigan faculty union, a chapter of the American Association of University Professors, and the university administration recently reached a tentative agreement for the university, and the faculty have returned to work.

The new four-year contract includes raises and a $1,000 incentive to join a new health plan. The faculty initially wanted language in the contract that maintained the number of tenure and tenure-track lines, but the administration refused.

However, the university did agree to include language that limited the number of part-timers, which said "in the absence of a change in circumstances, it will not permanently replace regular faculty members by a change in its historical uses of part-time lecturers."

Denise Tanguay, a member of EMU's faculty bargaining team, said the language is important because it gives EMU's faculty the opportunity to strengthen the position if it is necessary in the future.

The administration at EMU has stated publicly and at the bargaining table that they have no intention of decreasing tenure and tenure-track faculty or substituting them with lecturers.

Tanguay, a professor of management, said this statement is not only an important part of the bargaining history, but valuable when national statistics are considered.

"The national trends are very clear in terms of the substitution of part-time people for regular tenure-track folks," Tanguay said.

The main concern is that quality is maintained in teaching. This can become difficult when funding is decreased, Tanguay said.

"It's cheaper to higher part-time people at low pay and have a bunch of them teach courses than it is to higher a full-time tenure track faculty member and give them benefits," Tanguay said.

At SIUC in 1999, full professors earned an average salary of $69,488, instructors made an average of $28,814 and lecturers made an average of $30,457.

One of the problems during the EMU negotiations was the disagreement between the faculty and the administration on the actual count. The faculty counts lines, while the administration counts bodies.

Tanguay said proportions need to be considered in this type of a situation. If the number of non tenure-track instructors are increasing, it is unlikely the number of tenure and tenure-track professors will be increasing.

The problem is that lecturers do not conduct research, sit on committees or advise students, Tanguay said.

"To protect the quality of higher education we need to maintain a very strong core of full-time tenure and tenure track faculty," Tanguay said.

SIUC interim Chancellor John Jackson acknowledged the national trend of increased term faculty use and said lack of funding has contributed to SIUC's participation in the trend. Jackson said term faculty are invaluable because they enable the University to provide enough classes for students.

"Our teaching commitment to our students must be met," Jackson said.

The University also agrees with the practice of giving term professors the option of becoming tenure-track and replacing a leaving tenured professor. Jackson said it is often done when the University does not have the time to conduct a search for a new faculty member.

Just because instructors are classified as term faculty does not make them less qualified, Jackson said.

"Some of our best teachers are term faculty," Jackson said.

Mary Lamb, vice president of the Faculty Association, said the use of part-time instructors is less of an issue at SIUC, but the same problems can be found in the use of graduate assistants as instructors.

SIUC's very own pirate queen

Professor tries to solve the mystery of Blackbeard's flagship, the Queen Anne's Revenge

JASON COKER
DAILY EGYPTIAN

Queen Anne's Revenge, the legendary pirate Blackbeard's flagship, sank off the coast of North Carolina in 1718. In 1996, it was discovered.

Lee Newsom was summoned to verify the ship's remains. An associate professor in anthropology and plant biology at SIUC, she examined wood from the hull of the ship and was able to bolster claims that Blackbeard's treasure might be a little closer to being discovered.

Newsom, who will speak at the Student Center Auditorium tonight at 8 p.m., is an expert on ancient timbers. Newsom said she can tell where ships are built based on the type of wood they are made from. European ships are usually made of oak, while black locust trees were used to make colonial American boats.

"We've mapped it, we've found artifacts that virtually every one of them dates to the right window—late 1600s, early 1700s," Newsom said.

Discoverers also found a bell dated to 1709 and a cannon manufactured in 1713, and many of the artifacts come from London. They have "maker's marks" to prove when and where they were made. Newsom said the ship was built in a way conforming to the unique style of the times, furthering the belief that they found Blackbeard's flagship.

Edward Teach, alias Blackbeard, was a privateer working for the British during Queen Anne's War between 1702 to 1713. After the war, he continued to raid ships, eventually turning on English vessels.

The ship was originally the Concorde, a French slave ship, before Blackbeard seized it in 1717. He armed it with 40 cannons, and with three smaller ships he blockaded Charleston Harbor for a week. Newsom said 21 cannons have already been discovered, and according to radar there are a lot more still beneath the ocean floor.

"He had a floating fortress, which was one reason he was such a terror of the seas," Newsom said.

Blackbeard allegedly amassed a large treasure, but it was never found. Newsom said traces of gold dust have been seen between the timbers of the ship. However, she believes most of the loot was probably taken off the ship before it sank.

At his hanging in 1718, Blackbeard refused to tell where he had hidden his stolen items.

"I've buried my treasure where none but Satan and myself can find it," Blackbeard reportedly said shortly before dying.

While the story may not be entirely true, Newsom said there is evidence that pirates took great care in hiding their treasure.

"You know how all the pirate stories go about burying treasure all over creation? One of the things we recovered was surveyor equipment," Newsom said. "You hear about the 40 paces to the oak tree and turn left. Maybe they were really serious and systematic in burying treasure and going back and finding it."

Frederick Williams, director of the University Honors Program, said Newsom weaves together stories in a fascinating, unique way. He said this is why Newsom was asked to take part in the Charles D. Tenney Distinguished Lecturer Series.

"She is one of the most fascinating researchers on our campus," Williams said. "We are always trying to get researchers that are interesting and doing interesting things."

Newsom will travel back to North Carolina sometime this fall, and she said she plans to study the latest artifacts being uncovered.

Ed GULICK - DAILY EGYPTIAN

Associate professor Lee Newsom was the leading scientist to confirm the time period of what is believed to be the remains of Blackbeard's flagship.

OUR WORD

Careful investment in the Salukis could pay big for SIU

Give them a year, and they'll take a first down. That's what the critics will say of Athletic Director Paul Kowalczyk's request for new AstroTurf in McAndrew Stadium, and they have a point.

In about five years, SIUC is scheduled to have a new football stadium. The cost of new turf for McAndrew could range from $750,000 to $1 million dollars, while the athletic department's budget remains in the red. And Title IX issues linger, as the women's softball team plays on without adequate facilities.

The department's problems aren't small. But they don't necessarily preclude the possibility of new turf.

More than a decade old, the turf in McAndrew has moved past the realm of inconvenient; now, the hard, uneven surface our football team plays on is becoming a safety threat.

The needs of our football program have led many to the point of exasperation, as they point to our disappointing record and the ever-inflating price tag. But SIU has rightfully made a commitment to revive the program in recognition of the benefits the sport has to offer institutions of higher education. This is a not an easy commitment to make, because to attempt to fix the football program only halfway would be a true waste of resources.

The DAILY EGYPTIAN supports the purchase of new turf, but not without conditions.

We are confident alumni and other SIUC benefactors will help to offset the price of new AstroTurf, but that alone cannot justify investing in the crumbling structure of McAndrew. Kowalczyk said he is examining the possibility of laying turf that can be moved into the new stadium when it is built. This should be considered the only option as SIUC shops for new turf. The best argument for building a new stadium was that improving McAndrew is a losing battle.

Any new expenditures by the department must be second to SIU athletics' disparity in gender equity.

But more importantly, for both SIUC's image and the sake of fairness, the replacement of the turf cannot be at the expense of Title IX compliance. The updating of SIU's softball facilities has been pushed back long enough. Now, any new expenditures by the department must be second to SIU athletics' disparity in gender equity.

The SIU administration has to know the goal of resuscitating Saluki football requires more than just a one-time investment. But with every penny spent, we expect future returns. When the Salukis begin to consistently win games and the stands are filled, SIUC will then have rejuvenated a program that has been in dire straits ever since the 1983 season, when SIU brought home the Division I-AA national championship crown. Only diligent and efficient planning will make that possible.

Nate Carr wants to be a millionaire, but he'll settle to be on TV

Last week, I wrote about my relentless pursuit of fame by auditioning for game shows, "reality" programs ... pretty much anything short of going to Hollywood and hopping on the casting couch.

(For those of you who don't know what the casting couch is, it is how silicon-enhanced starlets get small parts on shows, or, depending on whose couch it is, get actual speaking parts in major movies.)

At any rate, the day after my article appeared, the DE ran a blurb about "Who Wants to be a Millionaire?" holding auditions for college students, the closest of which was being conducted Saturday in Chicago. I felt it was my journalistic duty to drive to the Windy City to try out. Besides, I was going to Champaign on Sunday to see the Uge anyway.

So after I spent Friday night getting pummeled at the Carbondale Uge show, I drove to Chicago during the night with no sleep. When I got to Marion, I was questioning my decision until I realized that I was on a mission, dammit. My infinite capacity for rationalizing any idiotic thing I do has been most of the reason I go on these excursions in the first place.

I reached Chicago at 7 a.m., delicious and with my ears still ringing. For once, I was pleasantly surprised at how there were not thousands of people that had camped out in line for days, as opposed to what usually goes on as part of my foolish trips.

I realized later that these were college students. Hell, if you told SIU students that by showing up somewhere at 8 a.m. on a Saturday they would just be given a million dollars, the turnout would be minimal.

portion of the questions were about stuff I DID know, or that I felt fairly confident about. (I can not get more specific than that, with the confidentiality agreements.)

I finished my test before anyone else in the room, and as I bounced up and down in my seat, hyper and tired, I felt a strange vibe of ... dare I say it ... positivity? Anyone who knows me knows I am about as optimistic as Eeyore, so this was a very odd development for me.

As if the event was not nerve-wracking enough, they took a good half-hour to grade the tests, then they announced the numbers of the people who passed in a random order.

I chewed on my nails and listened, hoping against hope.

"78 ... 63 ... 22 ..."
Please, please, please.
"97 ..."
"44 ..."
"106 ..."

If you are familiar with Tiger Woods and the way he celebrates, you know how I reacted: I pumped my fist hard enough to dislocate my elbow, not that I would have felt it.

So as I waited for, and finally sat for, my on-camera interview in which I bounced, grinned, and babbled, I came to a few important conclusions:

1. Sleep is unnecessary.
2. It is sometimes okay not to be a sour, cynical bastard.
3. Every stardom-failure I have endured was worth this tiny morsel of success.

Realistically, I have about a 1-in-35 shot of making it on the show, based on the people who passed in my audition and how many cities auditions were in, but that is quite a bit better than what I expected.

Still, I guess they could be better than that ... must fight neg.ativity... ah, who am I kidding? My life still sucks, I just drove hundreds of miles to run to it. So I guess the only thing I REALLY learned is how to get another column out of the same topic I used last week. Thanks for enabling me to get away with it! Next week, I promise, I will be back to my old bitter self. But it was nice while it lasted.

It's a mistake to give up on the Salukis now

DEAR EDITOR:

I'm tired of reading all of these letters to the editor about getting rid of the football program. What is the message these people are trying to send? If things don't go just perfect, we should give up? Is success measured only in wins and losses? Let's look on the bright side. Maybe we haven't won every game so far, but the football team isn't giving up. We have the leading rusher in the Gateway Conference in Tom Koutsos and two of the top-three receivers in Mark Shasteen and Brian Hamlett, not to mention an NFL-caliber kicker in Scott Everhart.

On second thought, maybe we should let the program go. After all, great things happen in life when you just give up. Just think of what a better country this would be if we had just let Japan win World War II, because they hit us first. Yeah, and Hitler was doing so well in Europe, why put up a fight? We already lost France and Poland, what's the use? Or think of how peaceful this country would be now if only Martin Luther King Jr. had given up. I mean, isn't that what we should do, just give up when things don't go our way immediately?

Oh yeah, we've given the football program long enough. What if we just suck it up and say, "You know, we've given this racial equality thing long enough, it's time to let it go and just succumb to racism." While we're at it, let's just shut down the University. We're not number one. We're not even number one hundred and one.

This defeatist attitude does nothing to enhance the spirit of the University or the area surrounding this University. I'm not giving up. The coaches aren't giving up. The players aren't giving up. I think they deserve our support. As for me, I'll be there for every game, cause I think some things are worth the effort.

Bus drivers falsely blamed

DEAR EDITOR:

After hearing many references to the charter buses picking up the University of Northern Iowa team late at the airport and getting them to the stadium as much as two hours late (for the Sept. 16 football game), I would like to set things straight.

Being one of the charter bus drivers who was originally contracted by UNI, we were to pick up the team at 10 a.m. at Southern Illinois Airport in Carbondale. I arrived at 9:45 a.m. at the airport and awaited the plane. At 10 a.m. the plane had not arrived. I received a phone call from my employer that one of the coaches from the UNI team had called and they were at the Williamson County Airport waiting to be picked up, some 18 miles away. The other driver and I left Southern Illinois Airport and proceeded to the other airport. We picked up the team and arrived at McAndrew Stadium at 11:05 a.m., only 35 minutes later than the originally scheduled time of 10:30 a.m. We, the drivers, attended the game and we felt that the Dawgs kicked BUTT, and the state up on the airports, whoever was at fault, was not a determining factor in the game.

We have driven several sports teams and various other groups connected with SIU on a regular basis without being late on the pickups or deliveries. I hope this clears up any misconceptions anyone may have about this incident.

CAREER FAIR PROMOYour chance to show employers what you've got!*October 3, 2000 • 10:00 a.m. - 3:00 p.m. • Student Center Ballrooms*Career Fair gives opportunities to allJAKE MCNEILL SIUC Career Services will be holding "Career Fair 2000" from 10 a.m. until 3 p.m. on October 3. It will give students a chance to make valuable connections and meet with over 100 potential employers.

Students in all areas of study are welcome at the fair, located in the Student Center Ballrooms.

"Students will want to attend this event to make connections with employers in all job openings," said Valerie Enchelmayer, career services specialist.

It is important for students to attend this fair even if they aren't ready to graduate this semester.

"Every business that is going to be in attendance should have at least one opening and every major is welcome. Just because you don't have a particular degree is not an issue, they are looking for people who would be a good employee, not someone with a certain degree," said Enchelmayer.

The Career Fair is good for both winter and spring graduates because of important contacts that you could make for yourself in your career in the future.

"There are all sorts of potential careers at this year's fair, everything from health services to clothing and textiles and hotel and restaurant management," said Enchelmayer.

Another interesting fact of this year's fair is that there will not only be interviews conducted on site, but afterwards.

"Make sure to bring a resume and business cards with you because you could get an interview that day or also make contacts. It is also important to dress professionally, just like an interview, said Enchelmayer.

Make sure to register for interviews for the Career Fair 2000 on campus. The cost is $26 and you can register for it at the Career Fair or B204 Woody Hall.

KOEHN

Democrats how he planned to address financial aid for students, Koehn said, "I'm all for financial aid. You're looking at a product of financial aid. I'm not saying I wouldn't have made it through school without it, but my student loans and Pell grants sure did help."

Koehn said he has a real sense of commitment to SIUC.

"Being an SIUC alumnus, I have the ability to understand the problems and issues of the University. I'll go to bat for SIUC," he said.

After receiving an agriculture degree in 1973, Koehn worked a variety of jobs as a farming factory worker, and finally moved into teaching.

"I have a feel for what's like to be on that assembly line, and on the farm, and I think that is the type of background that represents the working families of Southern Illinois," Koehn said.

Koehn eventually discovered that his first love was teaching, and later received a master's degree and his superintendent certification. He has taught ever since.

Koehn, the superintendent

Koehn's experience and expertise as an educator and administrator became clear with a visit to DeSoto Grade School. He was sitting in his crowded office, wading through paperwork, when a call came from a teacher in the gymnasium who needed his help.

The students in the gym were giving speeches for the upcoming student council election, and the crowd was getting a little rowdy. As soon as Koehn walked in, the noisy seventh and eighth graders quieted down, and the main instigators of the trouble headed for a trip to Koehn's office.

This is Koehn's day job, and he appears absolutely comfortable doing it. The school office and the hallways are a flurry of activity, as children make their way to the school buses at the end of the day. Koehn walks down the brightly decorated halls and calls out warm greetings to parents and children.

"You would be hard pressed to find a problem with society that I have not seen. I've seen it all through the years — drugs, crime, alcoholism, poverty," Koehn said, stressing that when working with children, a solution to problems has to be found. "You can't just give up, or you lose the child."

Koehn has been looking for innovative ways to address society's ills, as demonstrated by the addition of a social worker, Mango Tesch, to his school.

"It's a relatively new idea," Tesch said. "He had the vision and the foresight to bring me here. I think that says a lot about Mr. Koehn's ideas about prevention and intervention."

Bill Riley, superintendent of Coulterville school, said this foresight was evident years ago when a bond issue to build a new school did not pass. Instead of lingering on the rejection, Koehn, who doesn't believe in giving up, thought of creative ways to consolidate the school they already had.

"He was able to take the negative and make it positive," Riley said.

Koehn, the campaigner

Koehn's optimism is evident in the race against Mike Bost. Some say Bost is so well-known that Koehn doesn't have a chance.

But Koehn is quietly confident as he steps out of his white Toyota Camry one early morning. The back seat of the car is filled with dress shirts and ties.

"I don't think Mike has it as simple as some think," Koehn said, as he straightened his blue polo shirt with a Koehn logo over his stocky frame. He explained the shirts and ties in the back seat were for later, when he would have to dress for school. With work and campaigning, Koehn is unable to make it home before 10 p.m. most nights.

This hectic pace doesn't show on Koehn's face though, as he strikes up conversations in restaurants to a group of men in baseball hats eating breakfast. Koehn stresses his education and farming background to each person.

"I am excited about representing this district. I have a real sense of loyalty to the people of Southern Illinois," he said.

Koehn gives his quick campaign spiel, in a thick Southern Illinois accent, many times that morning. Before leaving, he always remembers to stop on his way out the restaurant to thank the waitresses for their time.

After spending some time at his school, Koehn is back campaigning again, this time knocking door to door, talking first to a student in jeans, then to an elderly lady watering flowers in her yard.

"I just love this part. You never know who is going to show up on the other side of the door, or at the end of a chain," Koehn said with a laugh, adding that he has had his share of run-ins with constituents' dogs.

Koehn, the family man

Southern Illinois isn't the only thing Koehn feels loyalty toward. Family plays an important part of his life as well. The commitment to his children, Ben, Sara and Luke, is a major consideration in each decision he makes, said Koehn's wife Sue.

Sue Koehn said moving to a farm in Southern Illinois years ago was a culture shock for her at first. A native of St. Louis, she said she had to get used to Koehn's habit of speaking in farm lingo.

"When he gave me directions, he wouldn't say go right or left. He would tell me to go to the north tree, and then go south," Sue Koehn said with a laugh.

She added that after nearly 20 years of marriage the couple never fights. One reason is because Koehn never yells, she said.

"That is just the type of person he is. He is a good diplomat, but it can be an annoying characteristic when I'm mad and then he ends up just making me laugh."

Sara, his only daughter, was an avid sports fan. She said that her father was always very involved in her childhood. She remembers her dad leading her and her brothers into the car and taking them to the Gorham gymnasium to play basketball almost every weekend.

"No matter what we needed from him, he was always there," Sara said.

The pace of the last few months has been very busy, so Koehn has not been able to spend as much time at home as usual, his wife said.

"He leaves at 4 in the morning, and sometimes does not get home until 10 or 11 at night. It will be nice when we can have dinner as a family again, or go the movies," she said.

With less than two months left in the campaign, Sue Koehn will soon have her husband back, win or lose.

FACULTY

In some programs, graduate students are teaching 300 level courses, Lamb said. She said the main problem at SIUC is not the substitution of tenured faculty with term faculty, but the decreases in total faculty.

"Right now the primary issue at SIUC is that our administration is trying to cannibalize, that is take away our lines, our positions, for raises,"

Lamb said.

The number of full-time instructional faculty, which includes term, has decreased from 1,018 in 1990 to 925 in 1999.

Lamb said the loss of faculty lines should not just be a faculty concern, because it affects the entire University. Students are often recruited by the image of programs and the faculty contribute to that image.

"What happens when you lose too many faculty lines is the whole ship goes down," Lamb said.

Sharp like Tharp

Western Illinois running back Charles Tharp ran for a career-high 209 yards Saturday in the Leathernecks' 44-3 victory against Nicholls State. Tharp, who sat out the entire fourth quarter, could have set the league record for rushing yards in a game, owned by former Western back Aaron Stecker. Stecker rushed for 289 yards against SIU in 1997.

Two-Man Rushing Race

With his 209-yard effort Saturday, Western Illinois running back Charles Tharp squeaked past SIU sophomore back Tom Koutsos for the outright lead in the Gateway rushing race. Tharp increased his total to 535 yards, while Koutsos, who ran for 109 yards against Kansas Saturday, has 530. Willie Watts of Illinois State is a distant third with 300 rushing yards. Neither Tharp nor Koutsos played the fourth quarter of their games Saturday.

Shining Soliday

Junior receiver Jake Soliday tied a UNI-Dome record with 11 receptions for 139 yards in Northern Iowa's 37-30 victory against No. 10 Stephen F. Austin Saturday. Soliday now leads the league with 30 receptions for 351 yards. Teammate Eddie Berlin ranks second in the Gateway with 23 receptions for 291 yards.

... And Don't Forget about the QB

With the No. 1 and No. 2 receivers in the league, it is no surprise that Northern Iowa quarterback Ryan Helming leads the league in passing yards per game. Helming's passed for 917 yards through the Panthers first four games this season for an average of 229 yards per game. He also leads the league with seven touchdown passes.

Taking a Pass on Passing

Indiana State, known for running its option offense, has yet to throw a touchdown pass this season after four completions. Sycamore quarterback Jamie Dishroom has only connected on 13 completions out of 35 pass attempts for a season total of 164 yards, averaging just 41 yards per game through the air. The struggling Sycamores do rank third in the league in rushing yards (178.8) per game.

Airing it Out

Two of the league's most prolific passers battle face-to-face Saturday as Northern Iowa's Ryan Helming and Illinois State's Kevin Glenn square off. Helming leads the league in passing, while Glenn is No. 2 in the Gateway. Both are also climbing the ladder to becoming the Gateway's all-time career touchdown leaders. Paul Singer of Western Illinois (1985-88) is the all-time leader with 61. Helming currently has 54, while Glenn boasts 53.

honors in the No. 3 and No. 4 doubles bracket. The duo was defeated by the Lipson/Zarazee team of Indiana State, 8-3. They bounced back with victories over Hughes/Garner of Memphis (8-3) and won by injury default over the Friedman/Zelenovic of Missouri.

"It is a preseason, but it's a chance for them to do well individually. We just try to mainly go and make them focus on their game and kind of get an idea of what to work on the next week," Auld said.

While the pressure may be lower than in the spring, the team still has goals for the fall season.

"The [Missouri Valley Conference] Fall Invitational Tournament (Oct. 6-8) ... is what we're shooting for so we can bring home some individual conference titles," Auld said. "It is also a time to get your team to work together, and be supportive of each other."

regional rival Southeast Missouri State University.

SIU will have its hands full with the Otahkians (5-8, 3-0 Ohio Valley Conference), who are the reigning OVC Champions.

"We know it's going to be a good match," Locke said. "[It] is just a good rivalry so they are always going to be good matches, and I don't expect anything less than that."

and because you tried," Cannon said.

Parks' film career appeared to be pulling him toward New York. Leggans, McGee and Jones all talked of Parks' plans to go to New York, where he already appeared to have a contact ready to help him break into film business. Leggans said that Parks had planned to open martial arts classes in New York once he got there.

Jones was waiting at home for Parks to return at the time of the accident. He and Parks were supposed to go to the Recreation Center and spar, practicing for an upcoming wrestling match. He received the news Sunday evening from a numb, blank-faced McGee.

"I don't think I'm in denial, but I just can't believe he's actually gone," Jones said. "It seems like maybe he's in a coma or something like that."

A delivery comes for Parks; a c.o.d. package from a film store. The delivery sparks a discussion among the four, who feel they should accept the package for their absent friend. Realizing that they cannot pay for the package, the delivery man is sent away.

"Parks isn't here right now."

Saluki discipline resulting in Saluki victories

SIU softball freshman Tara Glasco connects during practice. Glasco went 2-for-2 against Indiana and 2-for-3 against Louisville with an RBI in both games. SIU finished 3-0 for the weekend.

SIU softball finishes 3-0 at Evansville Invitational to improve fall record Already eight games into the fall season and not a single Saluki home run. Kerri Blaylock is thrilled.

It was an over-reliance on the long ball last season that crippled the Saluki softball team average to a meager .231 mark. But eight games and not a single home run this fall has Blaylock upbeat with the offensive production, as the squad has shown more discipline at the plate. Rather than hitting for the fences, SIU has been hitting for average.

So, it's no surprise Blaylock's Salukis are 7-1 for the fall, after three more wins at the Evansville Invitational in Evansville, Ind., this weekend. SIU beat Indiana University 4-1, Tennessee State University 10-1 and the University of Louisville 6-0. The championship game versus the University of Evansville was rained out. Both SIU and Evansville finished 3-0.

The added discipline has not simply cut down on the home runs, it has also decreased the number of Saluki strikeouts. The Salukis are averaging two to three strikeouts per contest early this fall, after averaging eight to nine a game last season.

"It took maybe a year to get implemented, and the veterans started doing it immediately and now the new kids are understanding what we are wanting them to do," said Blaylock of the increased discipline at the plate. "We tell them if they get back to hitting line drives and hitting for average the home runs will come."

Against Indiana, senior center fielder Marta

Viefhaus drove in three runs on three hits, while senior third baseman Julie Meier went 2-for-4 and freshman Tara Glasco went 2-for-2 with an RBI. Senior hurler Erin Stremster pitched a complete game to earn the victory.

Walk-on Tahira Saafir led the hitting barrage against Tennessee State, going 2-for-3 with two runs scored. Senior Chiara Calverti doubled in two runs as well. Sophomore pitcher Katie Kloess pitched five innings for the win, while freshman Mary Jaszczak relieved Kloess to close the deal.

Jaszczak earned the win against Louisville, pitching five shutout innings before giving way to Stremster. Glasco led the offense with two hits and an RBI, while freshman twins Adie and Haley Viefhaus each had an RBI.

Blaylock said everyone in the lineup got at least a hit this weekend, and said her veterans and newcomers have mixed well together.

"This may have been one of the better fall weekends, as far as complete play, that we've had," Blaylock said. "We were so happy with the kids, we kept talking to them about having a plan when going to the plate and being disciplined."

About the only item of disappointment was that the Salukis did not get to play Missouri Valley Conference rival Evansville due to rain. Evansville scored just five runs in their three wins combined, but tossed shutouts in each contest. Evansville should contest SIU for the distinction as the best pitching staff in the Valley come the spring season.

"That'll be a treat when we do get to play them," Blaylock said.

SIU volleyball's gravy train comes to a halt

JENS DEJU

After starting the season off with six straight wins, the SIU volleyball team appears to have hit a wall, as the Salukis have lost six out of their last seven games.

The Salukis (7-6, 0-3 Missouri Valley Conference) were swept in two MVC matches as Illinois State University won (15-9, 15-12, 15-5) and Indiana State University won by three identical 15-9 scores this weekend.

"I just think that there was a little lack of competitiveness in us this past weekend. It was a little bit of a surprise to me," said SIU head coach Sonya Locke. "I can't say that it was passing or we didn't hit or whatever. Illinois State was pretty steady. Indiana State played great defense and they just took the games."

The Salukis started the weekend Friday night at Illinois State. The Redbirds (5-3, 2-1 MVC), backed by the 2,185 fans in attendance, continued the success they have enjoyed against the Salukis and raised their all-time mark against SIU to 43-4-1.

SIU's players said the big crowd did not affect them.

"I think we did a really good job of blocking out the crowd," said junior setter Megan Baumstark. "I don't think that was a problem, it didn't bother us at all."

What did bother the Salukis was the fact they let two potential MVC wins get away.

"I just think we didn't show up to play mentally and we didn't use our potential to our best abilities," said sophomore outside hitter Kristie Kemner. "I don't think we came ready to play. That or I don't think we believed we could truly beat these teams."

In the loss, the Salukis had strong showings from sophomores Kemner (14 kills, 11 digs) and Tara Cains (11 digs) and Baumstark (29 assists).

The Salukis hoped to rebound and get their first MVC win Saturday against Indiana State, but the win eluded them once again.

The crowd was noticeably smaller for this match as only 148 people were in the stands to watch the Sycamores (5-7, 1-3 MVC) sweep SIU and earn their first MVC win of the year.

Indiana State had quality performances from Cheryl Berg (19 kills, 16 digs, 4 block assists) and Megan Mins (36 assists, 11 kills, 9 digs). The Salukis had strong showings from Kemner (10 kills, 11 digs), Cains (8 kills, 7 digs, 4 block assists), Schultz (4 kills, 6 block assists), junior Lisa Vodin (11 digs) and Baumstark (32 assists, 4 kills).

"It didn't seem like we were forced at all times," Baumstark said. "We didn't always play with intensity, things just didn't fall together like they usually do. Something was missing this weekend."

Locke said she thought her players were getting down on themselves after making mistakes, and when on the road it's not as easy to rebound once giving opposing fans something to cheer about.

"We didn't go out and have fun," Kemner said. "We were very

SIU women's tennis shines in preseason play

The SIU women's tennis team typically approaches the fall schedule — with the absence of team scores in competition — as a time for improvement.

This past weekend, the team enjoyed improvement and victories in the No. 1 and No. 2 doubles bracket, No. 3 and No. 4 singles bracket and the No. 3 and No. 4 doubles bracket in the Billiken 2000 Fall Classic hosted by Saint Louis University.

"In the fall, we just want to play. We've gone to two tournaments, and we've put in a good performance for SIU," head coach Judy Auld said.

Sophomore Ana Serot and junior Erika Ochao finished first in the No. 1 and No. 2 doubles bracket with five straight victories. Serot and Ochao began with an 8-4 win over the Olshanskaya/Drake doubles team from the University of Missouri, went on to beat the Spencer/Glass duo of Murray State University 8-5, the Mikalayeva/Hoffman of Indiana State 8-3 and the Cornelissen/Gyaki doubles team of Iowa 8-4. In the championship round, they beat the Ladyman/Lindemann duo of the University of Memphis, 8-4.

Tana Trapani finished second in the No. 3 and No. 4 singles bracket. She defeated Elizabeth Bingier of Indiana State with scores of 3-6, 6-2, 10-1, and Caitin Thompson of Missouri with scores of 6-2 and 6-1. Trapani had no trouble with Sharla Whitaker of Iowa, defeating her 6-2 and 6-1, but lost to Vicki Zelinski 7-6 and 6-5.

"I'm really pleased with [Trapani] ... she's only a freshman," Auld said.
